At the end of the 18th century, the English seaside resort of Brighton was fortunate enough to be chosen by the British Royal Family as its official summer residence.

Along with the Royal Family came the cream of English society, including the aristocracy and the so-called "moneyed" classes. As a result, Brighton immediately became associated with glamour and sophistication, and even today, Brighton is very much regarded to be a fashionable place. Whether it is for watching one of the many sporting events held in the city, eating at one of its many renowned restaurants, clubbing in what is one of Europe's liveliest club scenes, or simply strolling along the pier or promenade, Brighton in the 21st Century is as popular as ever. The Royal Pavilion is a sight well worth seeing. It was built specially for the Prince Regent at the turn of the 18th century.

The Mogul style architecture, palm trees and gardens, are exotic and exciting. The Pavilion re-counts a wonderful impression of tropical India set among a unique example of early 18th century English architecture.The Palace Pier isn't just for taking a stroll, it has popcorn stands, fish-and-chips stalls, fortune tellers and an excellent night club, amusement arcades and pubs.Brighton was originally a fishing village before it was colonised by the royals and the aristocracy. The fishermen lived in the winding lanes which are today s attractions and have become known as The Lanes. They offer cosy pubs, antique shops, book shops and cafés on every corner.

Brighton is a city that has grown over the centuries, it is still very young and a popular universitiy city. Part of the reason is due to the closeness to London, trains run directly to Victoria and take about 45 minutes.
